A little pretty gingerbread house is perhaps a good way to start if you haven't built so many houses before. Besides, it doesn't take up much room when it stands there finished as a decoration in your Christmas home – but otherwise here are many, beautiful or fun houses to choose from.

All gingerbread houses start with a good dough as that is the basic building material. A lot of things have to be got right. The colour must be the correct one, and it must be durable. It must smell good – and last but not least – it must taste good for all tiny and large mouths that can't resist pinching a little corner. All the parts of the house are drawn in full-scale so you only have to copy them onto baking paper, cut the paper into the right shape and then start shaping your rolled dough with a knife.

Eva Grane and Ylva Norman, together with photographer Åke Gunnarsson, have made this book which is filled with lots of fun things to do at Christmas time!

About the authors:

Eva Grane was born in 1954 in Älvdalen, in Dalarna, northern Sweden, where she grew up in a 'family of builders'. Eva gained a qualification as a construction engineer before studying to become an architect. She has always felt the urge to build and make things.

Ylva Norman was born in 1954 in Älvdalen. She has a qualification in design, and has also studied dressmaking, and film at NYU. She has previously been involved in several book productions.

Åke Gunnarsson is a photographer with his studio in Årsta, Stockholm. His main clients are advertising agencies, newspapers and magazines. His subjects vary, but the photos are often of men in suits, of buildings or studio shots.
